MAN. Man was, in his original ſtate, a very noble and exalted creature; being placed as the head and lord of this world, having all the creatures in subjection to him. The powers and operations of his mind were extensive, capacious, and perfect; capable of contemplating on the works of God with infinite pleasure and delight, and of performing his will without the least deviation. But by sinning against his Creator, his mind is viciated, corrupted and debased; and he is in a ruined, lost, miserable and wretched state: Hence it is asked, What is man? Psal. 8. 4. The Hebrew word for man is Enosh, *i. e. sorry, wretched, and incurably sick, to denote his condition, in his apostacy from God. OLIVE is a tree full of fatneſs, and yields plenty of oil. There are two kinds of olive-trees, the wild and natural. The cultivated olive-tree is of a moderate height, its trunk knotty, its bark ſmooth, and of an aſh-colour, its wood is ſolid and yellowiſh, the leaves are oblong, and almoſt like thoſe of the willow, of a green colour, dark on the upper ſide, and white on the under ſide. In June it puts forth white flowers, that grow in bunches: after the flower ſucceeds the fruit, which is oblong and plump. The wild olive differs from this, in that it is ſmaller in all its parts. CRUDEN.

Sanctification differs from Juſtification,

1. Juſtification is a change of our ſtate from guilt and curſe, to pardon and acquittance; Sanctification is a change of our nature, from death to life, and from uncleanneſs, to holineſs.
2. Juſtification is an inſtantaneous act, and complete at once; Sanctification is gradual, and not complete till death.
3. Juſtification is by imputation of Chriſt's righteouſneſs to us; Sanctification is by grace communicated to us from Chriſt.
4. Juſtification is the cauſe; Sanctification is the effect.

SCORPION, A venomous reptile, ſomewhat like a ſmall lobſter, with a long ſlender tail, and a deadly ſting at the end of it. It has a bladder full of dangerous poiſon; its head appears to be joined to the breaſt; It has two eyes in the middle of its head, and two towards its extremity, between which come out, as it were, two arms, which are divided into two like the claws of a lobſter. It has eight legs proceeding from its breaſt, and every one divided into ſix parts, covered with hair, at the end whereof are ſix talons or claws. The belly is divided into ſeven rings, from the laſt of which the tail proceeds, which is divided into ſeven little heads, of which the laſt is armed with a ſting, filled with a cold poiſon, which it ſquirts into the part which it ſtings. The Scorpion is of a blackiſh colour, like ſoot; it waddles as it goes, and fixes violently with its ſnout, and by its feet, on ſuch perſons as it ſeizes, ſo that it cannot be plucked off but with difficulty. They ſay, that the dam brings forth eleven young ones, which are ſmall round worms; that after ſhe has ſat upon them, and hatched them, then they kill the mother. They are more miſchievous to women than men, and more to girls than women. It is ſaid, that the beſt and ſureſt remedy againſt the bite of a Scorpion, is, to ſqueeze it to pieces upon the wound.

WISDOM, In Hebrew, Chachemah; in Greek, Sophia. CRUDEN.

Wiſdom, knowledge, and underſtanding, are generally looked upon as ſynonimous terms, or words of the ſame import; yet, perhaps, they are more accurate who conſider them as diſtinct. Knowledge conſiſteth in having a ſtock of judicious and proper ideas and notions of things: Wiſdom conſiſts in reducing theſe to practice, in conducting any affair with ingenuity and ſkill. "Knowledge hath its ſeat in the ſpeculative underſtanding, Wiſdom in the practical. Knowledge is an underſtanding of general rules, Wiſdom is a drawing concluſions from thoſe rules, in order, to particular caſes. A man may have the knowledge of the whole Scripture, and have all learning in the treaſury of his memory, and yet be deſtitute of ſkill to make uſe of them on particular occaſions." CHARNOCK.

Hence it appears, that a perſon may have conſiderable knowledge, who yet, in reſpect of wiſdom, is a fool: Such are all thoſe who know the will of God, but do it not, Prov. 17. 16.

It is put for, [1] That prudence, which enables man to diſcern what is fit to be done, Eccl. 2. 13, 14. | 10. 10. [2] Quickneſs, or fertility of invention, and dexterity in execution, Exod. 31. 2, 3. [3] Craft, ſubtilty, cunning, Exod. 1. 10. 2 Sam. 13. 3. Job 5. 13. [4] True religion, and the fear of God, Pſal. 90. 12. | 111. 10. Prov. 9. 10. [5] Doctrine, learning, experience, Job 12. 12. Acts 7. 22. [6]

WOLF, In Hebrew, Zeeb; in Greek, Lycos; it is a kind of wild dog, well known.

The wolf is a very fierce and voracious animal of the woods, an enemy to cattle, ravenous, greedy, crafty, of a quick ſmell and ſight, very bold and warlike. They ſeldom howl till oppreſſed with famine. They devour hair, fleſh, and bones together, and render them whole in their excrements, and therefore never grow fat. In the abſence of the ſhepherd and his dog, they enter into the fold, and kill all therein before they begin to eat any. In time of great famine, they deſtroy one another; for when they meet together, bemoaning themſelves each to other, as it were by conſent, they run round in a circle, and the firſt which through giddineſs falleth to the ground, is forthwith devoured by the reſt. They are frighted at the throwing of ſtones, at fire, at the ſound of bells, and at the ſinging of men or women. When they ſet upon ſheep, they make choice of a dark and cloudy day, that they may eſcape the more ſafely; and they go againſt the wind, to prevent the dogs ſmelling them. They are ſaid to feign the voices of men, and barking of dogs.

It is recorded that one Gelon of Syracuſa, then a ſcholar at ſchool, was thus preſerved: A wolf entering the ſchool, ſeized on Gelon's writing-table, and haſted to be gone; Gelon purſued after his table; in the mean time the ſchool-houſe fell down, whereby both maſter and ſcholars were all killed, Gelon alone being preſerved. Many other things are reported of them.
